THE 4-WEEK SLEEP RESET

A Guided Program to Calm Your Mind and Reclaim Your Nights

How to Use This Program

Sleep habits often shift faster than general anxiety patterns, once the right routine is in place — which is why this program moves in four focused weeks rather than a longer arc. Each week has four parts: a lesson, a deeper dive, a workbook page, and a weekly check-in.

Work through it in order — each week builds on the routine and habits from the one before. Let's begin.

Week 0: Preparing for Your Reset

Before Week 1 officially begins, a small amount of preparation makes the whole program run more smoothly.

Gather What You'll Need

- Your Workbook, printed or ready to fill in digitally.
- A notepad by your bed, for the Racing Thoughts Log.
- A realistic target bedtime and wake time to aim for throughout the program.

Set Your Intention

Take a moment to write down, in your own words, why you're doing this program — what better sleep would actually change in your daily life. Revisit this on harder nights.

A Note Before You Start

This program works best with consistency, not perfection. Missing a day here or there doesn't undo your progress — showing up most days, most weeks, is what actually builds the pattern.

WEEK

Understanding Your Sleep Pattern

01

Before changing anything, this week is about seeing clearly what's actually happening with your sleep.

Welcome to Week One

Four weeks from now, sleep won't require the same nightly bracing it might right now. Not because every hard night disappears, but because you'll have a real, working routine and a clearer picture of your own pattern.

Naming Your Pattern

Onset difficulty, middle-of-the-night waking, early waking — each calls for a slightly different emphasis. This week is entirely about observation, using your tracker, before changing anything.

“You can't fix a pattern you haven't actually looked at yet. This week, you look.”

THIS WEEK'S PRACTICE

- Read Chapters 1-3 of your companion Guide.
- Start your Daily Sleep Tracker — just observe this week.
- Notice which sleep pattern (onset, middle, early waking) describes you most.

Week 1 • A Deeper Dive

Why Observation Comes First

It's tempting to jump straight to fixes. But the right fix depends on your specific pattern — someone with onset difficulty needs different emphasis than someone waking at 4 a.m. daily. A week of honest tracking makes every later week more effective.

Common obstacle this week: "I don't want to think about my sleep even more by tracking it." That's a fair concern — keep this week's tracking brief and factual, not another space for anxious rumination. Chapter 47 covers this balance in more depth later.

Workbook · Week 1 — Understanding Your Sleep Pattern

What does a hard night feel like for me, specifically?

Which sleep pattern (onset, middle waking, early waking) describes me most?

Date	Bedtime	Wake Time	Rested (1–10)

Weekly Check-In • Week 1

What did I notice about my own sleep pattern this week?

Week 1 • Common Questions

Do I need a full two weeks of tracking before starting Week 2?

No — one week is enough to move forward. You can keep tracking as you go.

What if my pattern doesn't fit neatly into one category?

That's common — many people have a mix. Note whichever shows up most, and adjust as you learn more.

Building Your Wind-Down Routine

02

This is the week you build the single highest-leverage habit in this whole program.

Consistency Over Content

A repeated, simple sequence teaches your nervous system that sleep is approaching — the specific activities matter less than doing the same ones, in order, most nights.

Starting Simple

Pick 3-4 low-stimulation steps and start them 30-45 minutes before bed. Resist the urge to build an elaborate routine you won't actually repeat.

“Your nervous system doesn't need a perfect routine. It needs a repeated one.”

THIS WEEK'S PRACTICE

- Build your Wind-Down Routine using the Workbook worksheet.
- Follow it at least 5 nights this week.
- Track completion, not perfection, in your Workbook.

Week 2 • A Deeper Dive

Why the First Few Nights Feel Awkward

A new routine often feels effortful or unnatural for the first several nights — that's expected, not a sign it isn't working. The nervous system learns through repetition; by the end of this week, it should already start to feel more automatic.

Common obstacle this week: "I keep skipping steps when I'm tired." Start smaller — a 3-step routine followed consistently beats a 6-step routine followed occasionally.

Workbook • Week 2 — Building Your Wind-Down Routine

My wind-down routine steps are:

How many nights did I follow it this week?

Weekly Check-In • Week 2

Which step of my routine felt most natural?

Did I notice any difference falling asleep by the end of the week?

Week 2 • Common Questions

What if I fall asleep during my wind-down routine before finishing it?

That's a good sign, not a problem — it means your body is responding. Simplify the routine if this happens often.

Can my routine be different on weekends?

Some flexibility is fine, but keeping the core structure similar helps maintain the association you're building.

Calming the Racing Mind

03

This week is for the nights your body is tired but your mind won't stop — the 2 a.m. spiral, specifically.

The Loop, Named

Worry activates your nervous system, which makes sleep harder, which confirms the original worry. Interrupting it anywhere in the loop — thought, body, or behavior — helps.

Your Tools This Week

The Worry Window, the Racing Thoughts Log, and extended-exhale breathing all target this exact pattern from different angles.

“A racing thought at 2 a.m. is not a fact. It's just the loudest guess your tired brain could produce.”

THIS WEEK'S PRACTICE

- Set a 10-15 minute Evening Worry Window earlier each night.
- Use the Racing Thoughts Log if you wake with spiraling thoughts.
- Practice extended-exhale breathing at least once daily.

Week 3 • A Deeper Dive

Why Nighttime Amplifies Ordinary Worries

Without the day's usual distractions, an ordinary concern can feel enormous at 2 a.m. simply because nothing else is competing for your attention. Recognizing this pattern, even mid-spiral, is often enough to loosen its grip slightly.

Common obstacle this week: "My worry window doesn't stop thoughts from showing up later anyway." It's not meant to eliminate them — it's meant to give them a place, so when they show up at night you have somewhere to defer them to, rather than solving them at 2 a.m.

Workbook • Week 3 — Calming the Racing Mind

What showed up most in my worry window this week?

Did deferring nighttime thoughts feel any different by the end of the week?

Weekly Check-In • Week 3

Which technique helped most with racing thoughts this week?

Week 3 • Common Questions

What if a thought feels too urgent to wait for the worry window?

Genuinely urgent matters are rare at 2 a.m. — jot a one-line reminder and trust your morning self to handle it.

Is it normal for this to take longer than a week to feel natural?

Yes — cognitive techniques often take longer to feel automatic than physical ones. Keep practicing past this week if needed.

Sustaining Your Reset

04

This is graduation week — not the end, but the start of carrying this forward without a workbook prompting you.

From Program to Practice

The structure of a 4-week program naturally falls away once it's finished — what carries forward is whichever few practices you've made small and automatic enough to keep doing on your own.

Your Maintenance Rhythm

One consistent wake time, one wind-down routine, and periodic tracking (without obsessing) are enough to sustain real progress long-term.

“You didn't fix four weeks of sleep by being perfect. You did it by showing up, night after night. Keep doing that.”

THIS WEEK'S PRACTICE

- Complete your Sleep Toolkit exercise in the Workbook.
- Set your 90-Day Sleep Vision.
- Take a moment to genuinely acknowledge how far you've come.

Week 4 • A Deeper Dive

Maintenance Is the Real Work

The hardest part of any sleep program isn't the first few weeks — it's maintaining the routine once life gets busy again. Keeping your wind-down routine as a light, ongoing habit is what protects the progress you've built.

Common obstacle this week: "I'm worried I'll slide back into old habits." Some slide-back is normal and doesn't erase what you've built — your Sleep Toolkit and escalation plan are exactly the tools designed for catching it early.

Workbook • Week 4 — Sustaining Your Reset

My Core Three sleep tools are:

The one habit I'll keep as non-negotiable going forward:

One thing I'm proud of from these four weeks:

Weekly Check-In • Week 4

What's the one practice from these four weeks I most want to keep?

Week 4 • Common Questions

What if I have a bad night right after finishing this program?

That's normal and doesn't erase your progress — use your Sleep Toolkit and remember one hard night is data, not a relapse.

Should I repeat this program if I slide back later?

You can revisit any week anytime — many people return to Week 2 or 3 specifically when their routine has slipped.

A Note on Setbacks

At some point after this program, you'll likely have a genuinely hard night, or even a hard week. This is normal and doesn't mean the program didn't work — it means you're human, and sleep isn't a problem that gets permanently solved so much as a pattern you keep tending to.

When a setback happens, resist the urge to abandon everything and start over from scratch. Instead, return to whichever single piece — your wind-down routine, your worry window, your breathing technique — feels most relevant right now, and rebuild from there.

General Questions About This Program

Can I do this program if I'm already using the full Sleep & Insomnia Reset Guide?

Yes — this program is designed to work alongside the Guide, giving you a structured weekly pace through the same core material.

What if four weeks isn't enough time for me?

That's completely fine — repeat any week as long as you need before moving on, or simply continue your routine past the formal four weeks using the same principles.

Do I need the Workbook and Bonus Pack to complete this program?

The program includes its own workbook pages, but the full Workbook and Bonus Pack add more trackers, cheat sheets, and depth if you want to go further.

Your 90-Day Follow-Through Plan

The four weeks you just completed are the foundation. What happens over the next 90 days determines whether this becomes a lasting pattern or fades once the structure is gone.

Days 1-30 After the Program

Keep your wind-down routine as a non-negotiable habit, even on easier nights. Continue light tracking — a quick note each morning, not an elaborate log.

Days 31-60

Revisit your Workbook's Weekly Reflections periodically. If a habit has slipped, this is the natural checkpoint to notice and rebuild it before it fully disappears.

Days 61-90

Complete your 90-Day Sleep Vision from the Workbook. Compare where you are now to where you started — most people are surprised by how much has actually shifted, even on the nights that still feel hard.

A Sample Day, Start to Finish

Seeing how the pieces fit together across a full day can make the program feel more concrete. Here's one example — adapt the specific times to your own life.

Morning

Consistent wake time, regardless of how the night went. A few minutes of morning light exposure near a window or outside.

Daytime

Caffeine kept to the morning. A short walk or movement, ideally not too close to bedtime.

Early Evening

Evening Worry Window, 10-15 minutes, well before bed. Last substantial meal finished 2-3 hours before sleep.

Wind-Down (30-45 Minutes Before Bed)

Lights dimmed, screens away, the same 3-4 step routine from Week 2 followed in order.

If Sleep Doesn't Come Easily

Extended-exhale breathing. If 20 minutes pass, up briefly in dim light, then back to bed when sleepy.

Certificate of Completion

This certifies that has completed The 4-Week Sleep Reset Program — four weeks of showing up, building a real routine, and reclaiming their nights, one small step at a time.

You Made It — Now Keep Going

Four weeks ago, sleep may have felt like something happening to you, unpredictably. By now, you've built a real, working relationship with it — a routine you trust, tools for the racing-mind nights, and a clearer sense of your own pattern.

Keep this program and its companion Guide, Workbook, and Bonus Pack nearby. Revisit whichever week is relevant when a harder stretch comes up again — because it will, sometimes, and that's not a failure. That's just being human.

You showed up for four weeks. That's not nothing. That's everything.
